An adventure about boys...

Eldot presents a fresh new novel for adults. The story is embedded in an episodic two week summer camp full of variety and fun. Profundities are implied, not paraded; many readers will supply their own as they go along.

Little J is meant to enhance the urge and call for nostalgia. The happy days of youth are special, perhaps to relive some memories, or to supply ones that were missed. This is a peek at the world before the Internet and cell phones—when things were done manually.

- Did you miss the chance to go to summer camp? This story will fill the gap.
- Did you go to camp but it was boring, or too short? This will make up for that.
- Did you go to camp, but were too inhibited to try all those things? Here is a memory for you to cherish.
- Did you go to camp but it was too straight or puritanical? Here is your substitute.
- Or was your camp experience fabulous and terrific? See how this one compares!

This story about love and discovery is not the usual coming of age drama—this one begins at the top and keeps going. A lot of boys frolic, experiment, and discover wonderful things. There are surprises and lots of fulfilled expectations. Very fulfilled. Naturally, most of these are not “approved” activities.

Barr’s Meadow is the first novel in a five novel series.

Little J is meant for mature readers—to assist in recalling the happy days of their youth, perhaps to relive some, or to supply ones that they didn’t have.

Not for sale to persons under 18 years old.
