Eldot, Author of Little J and Roger, ups the ante in The Poker Game

Portland OR, May 1, 2011—Less than three months have gone by since the publication of the first book in the five book series. Again, the book is published in eBook form at Smashwords, where it is available for sampling and purchase in all major eBook formats. [<http://www.smashwords.com/books/view/56986>]

A Deluxe PDF version is published simultaneously at the websites of Diphra Enterprises. [<http://www.diphra.com> and <http://www.littlejandroger.com>] These versions replicate the features of a print edition, including page numbers and detailed indexing. Numerous extra features, supplemental information, and samples are available at the websites.

The Poker Game takes off where Barr's Meadow left off. The secret romance of Julian and Mark grows and develops. The relationship of Tom and Nick becomes a major focus. It is intense and becomes less secret each day. The special surprise is the exotic newcomer Geoff. From sunny California, he is years ahead in experience. He is the fox in the chicken coop. His friends from Atlanta have devised an extreme version of strip poker, and they invite Tom to play a game.

This story is not the usual coming of age adventure. Eldot takes the reader into the consciousness of the boys as they discover who they are; he allows them to bloom and play according to their individual needs. There are new romances and there are those new to the very idea. These variations on a theme are played out without need to rely on the standard social proscriptions to drive or define the subject. No inevitable agony or painful ends are in store. Lots of suspense and some doubt, maybe—but fun, discovery, achievement and the natural energy from within offset the obstacles. This is an Adults Only series.

About Eldot: He is a longtime resident of Portland, and is retired. He has a number of years of writing experience, but the Little J and Roger series is his first venture into published fiction. He uses a pen name for a variety of reasons, public and personal. This project is entirely out of character with his previous career and achievements, and to reference those would be of no use and out of order. A fresh start, new face, whatever one wishes to call it, will serve everyone best. A brief profile is available at Smashwords and diphra.com.
